In this conception of the human soul, a human being is effectively composed of two distinct subjects: a subject of knowledge, which is the intellect, and a subject of experience, which is common sense. I emphasize that these are two distinct subjects that constitute a human being for therein lies the crux of the problem, and we were a little too hasty in calling them faculties of the soul. The Full text of "Abraham Abulafia: A Starter Kit"

I, [Abraham Abulafia], the individual mentioned in the introduction, was born in Saragossa, in Argon, which is in the Kingdom of Spain. Before I was weaned, while I was still an infant suckling milk from the breasts of my mother, I moved to [Navarra], some sixteen parsangs from the city where I was born, together with my brothers and sisters. I thus grew up on the Ebro River, which passes
