Although it is clear that much does indeed turn on what we think human rights to be, if one is speculating on the acceptability of human rights thinking to God, or to religious believers, then it is more important to dwell on what human rights thinking has to say about God and about religion. For all the complexities of its substantive application, the essence of the human rights approach to Does God Believe in Human Rights?: Essays on Religion and ...

Since God made human beings in his own image, He too respects the worth and dignity of humanity. Human rights is therefore necessary to protect the value of each person. The basis of human rights from this perspective is thus rooted in human dignity. Human rights is necessary because human dignity is too often denied in practice. Is a reference to God in the discussion of human rights misplaced? Do human fallibilities with respect to interpretation, judicial reasoning and the understanding of human oneness and dignity provide the key to the undeniable and sometimes devastating conflicts that have arisen between, and within, religions and the human rights movement? In this volume, academics and lawyers tackle these most difficult questions head-on, with candour and creativity, and the collection is rendered unique by What does the Bible say about human rights? - GotQuestions.org

But God's authority over us does not negate God's image in us. Our submission to the will of God does not annul God's command to love your neighbor as yourself (Matthew 23:39). In fact, we serve God most when we serve others (Matthew 25:40).
