Elementary Processes in Hydrogen-Helium Plasmas - Cross ...

Atomic and molecular processes play an important role in laboratory and astrophysical plasmas for a wide range of conditions, and determine, in part, their electrical, transport, thermal, and radiation properties. The study of these and other plasma properties requires a knowledge of the cross

Elementary Processes in Hydrogen-Helium Plasmas In this review, we provide quantitative information about the most important collision processes occurring in hydrogen, helium, and hydrogen-helium plasmas in the temperature range from 0. 1 eV to 20 keV. The material presented here is based on published atomic and molecular collision data, theoretical calculations, and appropriate extrapolation and interpolation procedures. This review gives the properties of each reaction, graphs of the cross sections and reaction rate coefficients
