The Area of the Brain Responsible for Spatial Awareness ...

To be able to move with precision, one must have a good sense of his surroundings and keep an eye for the ceiling, the walls, and other barriers present. Thankfully, most of us have good depth perception and spatial awareness. But did you ever wonder which part of our brains process this type of

HOW YOUR SENSE OF TOUCH WORKS - Neuroplasticity ...

For example, if your brain sends a signal to your hand to make a fist, your sense of touch provides an immediate return signal letting you know that your hand is in a fist. This creates a feedback cycle that facilitates better communication between your brain's impulses and the body's response.
