The End of Arrogance: America in the Global Competition of ...

In today's publishing world, it's always the subtitle that actually carries the core message of the book, which is "America in the Global Competition of Ideas." What we've tried to do is sketch a world where ideas compete in something that is much more like the marketplace, and one that is more familiar to us at home, ironically, in the economic realm than in the ideological realm.

Review: The End of Arrogance - FPIF

The End of Arrogance: America in the Global Competition of Ideas argues that with the rise of new powers advancing competing world views, the United States must learn to adapt. Five core American ideas that once dominated the global landscape peace is better than war, hegemony is better than balance of power, capitalism is better than socialism, and western culture is better than the rest.
