He was playing, certainly, with the uncertain difference between knowing and doing, or between constative and performative language; he was commenting on the possibility and discourse of nuclear warfare, and the reality of the arms race. The reality of this last has everything to do with a certain infinite and radical textuality. The nuclear phenomenon is "

The Photographed Gift: Participation, Relief Efforts, and ...

Increasingly, everyday photography is a performative practice related to presence, immediacy, and social networking (Sandbye 2014). The social-media photographic frame has become an event space with an undetermined value and temporal length.
