Nationalisation - Marxists Internet Archive

Marxism-Leninism is not an abstract theory that attempts to impose a dogma on all situations. It is a guide to action based on a dialectical method of historical and materialist understanding. As a guide to action the policy statement fails completely. Because of its own inability to recognise the basis for the support that exists for nationalisation and consequently its failure to examine

An Introduction To Nationalism Theory | theriskyshift.com

The primordialist branch of nationalism is popular because it recognizes the need for identification with the familiar and meaningful, rather than absorption into a culturally undifferentiated mass [or] domination by some other rival ethnic, racial, or linguistic community.
